

The Teachers Guide to Mrs. Curwens Pianoforte Method (the Child Pianist): Being a Practical Course of the Elements of Music (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from The Teachers Guide to Mrs. Curwens Pianoforte Method (the Child Pianist): Being a Practical Course of the Elements of Music

The Child Pianist series of books, with its accompanying Guide, was published in 1886. Its Lessons were sketched out for my own children and given to them, and they played the exercises and duets from MS. Publication was an after-thought. The Guide was an experiment. Nothing of the kind had been done for the pianoforte teacher. I wanted to do for her something akin to what my father-in-law, John Curwen, had done for the teacher of singing classes. My work was based upon his. I omitted all instructions from the Childs book, for the simple reason that even the youngest pupils will lose a little of the requisite veneration for their teacher when they know that the instruction given in the lesson comes just out of the book, whereas the person who can teach them out of his own head is felt to have a vast fund of knowledge which commands respect and gives weight to his words. But the young workman must know how to handle his tools; and the exercises of the Child Pianist would not have been helpful if used at haphazard. I therefore embodied in the Guide the directions for their use. The hearty reception of the first part of the work (Steps 1 to 4), first by the press and then by the teachers, strengthened my hands in the preparation of the second part, which appeared in 1889. Then came fourteen years of intercourse with teachers and experience of their mistakes and difficulties, and I saw that more was needed than I had done.
