

A Treatise on the Motor Apparatus of the Eyes: Embracing an Exposition of the Anomalies of the Ocular Adjustments and Their Treatment, With the ... and Their Accessories (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from A Treatise on the Motor Apparatus of the Eyes: Embracing an Exposition of the Anomalies of the Ocular Adjustments and Their Treatment, With the Anatomy and Physiology of the Muscles and Their Accessories When, in my work on Functional Nervous Diseases, published in 1884, I intimated that it would be followed by one on the Anomalies of the Muscles of the Eyes, my purpose was to compile the facts and views extant at that time. It then seemed that such a compilation, including the few new suggestions which I had myself advanced, would constitute a valuable accession to the working means required in treating many forms of nervous disturbances. The work was commenced, but it soon appeared that much was to be learned in this field and that it would be wiser to publish the principles which appeared to me to have been settled by my own investigations and experience in occasional articles, in the expectation that, at a later period, the substance of these might be assembled into book form. A series of articles, progressively developing the subject as it then presented itself, was consequently published. As these articles appeared from time to time, mostly in the Archives of Ophthalmology and Annals cOculistique, a very general interest in the subject was awakened both in America and in Europe. The subject, however, grew so rapidly under the teachings of experience and the closer investigation of the principles underlying the phenomena, that the publication of the work as a whole seemed further and further from realization. Several times the work has apparently been ready for presentation, yet as often new light has been thrown upon the facts already known in such manner as to make delay still desirable. At length, while I do not by any means imagine that the subject is advanced to its limit, for nothing is more true than that the answering of a question in science only opens the way for other questions, I believe that a good purpose will be served by presenting in a systematic form the principles which appear to me to govern the physiological actions and the anomalous disturbances of the motor apparatus of the eyes.
