

Los Angeles La Brea Tar Pits and Hancock Park (Images of America)

Ever since the first popular article on the Rancho La Brea Tar Pits was published in Sunset magazine in 1908, this amazing Ice Age fossil site has captivated the imaginations of countless people from all over the world. This death trap of the ages and its population of saber-toothed cats, dire wolves, and other extinct animals, now displayed in the stunning George C. Page Museum, continues to be one of the most popular tourist attractions in Los Angeles. George Allan Hancock donated the 26-acre site to the County of Los Angeles in 1924 to preserve this scientific treasure trove for research and the enjoyment of future generations.

Rancho La Brea Treasures of the Tar Pits: John M Harris The La Brea Tar Pits are a group of tar pits around which Hancock Park was formed in urban Los Angeles. The Native American Chumash and Tongva people living in the area built the Hancock Park Museum in Los Angeles County, which was built next to the tar pits in Hancock Park. These fossils help define a picture of what is thought to have been a cooler Los Angeles. Los Angeles La Brea Tar Pits and Hancock Park by - Goodreads In A Companion to American Cultural History, edited by Karen Halttunen, 183197.
