

Music in America

July, 1838, The Musical Review, a little weekly musical paper published in New York, issued the following circular: HISTORY OF MUSIC IN AMERICA. WE have been for some time engaged in collecting materials for a series of papers upon this subject, which are intended to embrace a general history of music in this country, from the settlement of Plymouth to the present time. Most of the facts which will be required to render our account complete must be derived from local records, and the communications of individuals, in different parts of the United States, who have given the subject consideration. Doubtless there are many who can render us important assistance in this undertaking, by forwarding all the information they may possess, which has any bearing upon the matter in question. We should be happy to receive, from our friends throughout the country, any particulars relating to music they may be able to furnish, either statistical or anecdotal, which will aid us in carrying out our plan. As soon as we shall have obtained all the necessary matter for this history, its publication in The Review will be commenced. Editors who may be disposed to further the object we have in view will confer a favor by noticing the above, or the substance of it, in their papers. But, as the promised History of Music in America did not make its appearance, we may feel sure that the desired communications also failed to appear.
