

Locus of control and attitude toward seeking counseling help: A research among secondary school students in Dodoma municipality, Tanzania

Just like other countries in Europe and America, currently Tanzania has been noted to direct concerted efforts towards producing highly qualified counselors whose expertise can be made use of at the secondary schools and at the teachers colleges. What was not clear, however, is the extent to which these services if made available will be taken advantage of by target students, Therefore The major purpose of this book is to provide a study that investigated the relationship that exists between locus of control and attitude toward seeking counseling help among secondary school students in Dodoma Municipality, The study used correlational design and both qualitative and quantitative paradigms. The results indicated that there is a significant but very weak negative correlation between locus of control and attitude toward seeking counseling help among secondary school students in Dodoma Municipality. Implications of the findings were critically examined and some policy recommendations were made in the light of the conclusions reached. Recommendations for further studies were also made.
