

Annual Report, Mental Health Intramural Research Program; Division of Clinical and Behavioral Research, and Division of Biological and Biochemical ... Individual Project Reports (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Annual Report, Mental Health Intramural Research Program; Division of Clinical and Behavioral Research, and Division of Biological and Biochemical Research, Vol. 2: July 1, 1973 June 30, 1974; Individual Project Reports

The preparation and translation of data collection schedules Of this kind with collaboration of psychiatrists from nine centers is, in itself, a significant contribution to the methodology available to future cross-cultural studies. In evaluating the applicability and reliability of the schedules, two findings were especially significant. First, it was possible to use the same standardized mental status interview (in translation where necessary) in all of the collaborating centers and reliability Of ratings within each of the centers was high. The reliability of the ratings across centers was at a lower but still acceptable level. Because history and social description data had to be collected in different ways in the different centers, and because these data depend so much for their psychiatric significance on the cultural milieu, it was more difficult to evaluate the comparability Of these kinds of information from center to center. However, the schedules provided a useful means of collecting these data and represent a first step towards the development of comparable methodology in this area as well.
